Course code S 9956 Module coordinator Lecturer Stefanie Obergfell Level of course Recommended prerequisites Type of course Weekly lecture hours (SWS) ECTS credits 2 Workload In total 60h, 30h course attendance, 30h self-study Assessment (grading; pass/fail) Regular cycle Language of instruction Contents: English language presentations are integral to communication in the international workplace. While students and professionals are normally competent at giving oral presentations in their mother tongue, the dual challenges of preparing and delivering English presentations can seem quite daunting, time-consuming and stressful. In this seminar, students will have plenty of time to practice and will be video-recorded in order to review their performance in more detail. After having successfully completed the course, the students should • be able to deliver a well-structured presentation • know how to use body language, gestures, voice, etc. to their advantage Teaching methods Assessment methods Recommended reading Marion Grussendorf: "English for Presentations", Cornelsen Adrian Wallwork: "English for Presentations at International Conferences", Springer	Course title	Presentation techniques
Module coordinator Miriam Heinrich Lecturer Stefanie Obergfell Level of course Bachelor Recommended prerequisites None Type of course Seminar Weekly lecture hours (SWS) 2 ECTS credits 2 Workload In total 60h, 30h course attendance, 30h self-study Assessment (grading; pass/fail) graded Regular cycle Each semester Language of instruction English language presentations are integral to communication in the international workplace. While students and professionals are normally competent at giving oral presentations in their mother tongue, the dual challenges of preparing and delivering English presentations can seem quite daunting, time-consuming and stressful. In this seminar, students will have plenty of time to practice and will be video-recorded in order to review their performance in more detail. Learning outcome (competencies): After having successfully completed the course, the students should Lecturer Level of course Recommended prerequisites Type of course Weekly lecture hours (SWS) ECTS credits Assessment (grading; pass/fail) Contents: English language presentations are integral to communication in the international workplace. While students and professionals are normally competent at giving oral presentations in their mother tongue, the dual challenges of preparing and delivering English presentations can seem quite daunting, time-consuming and stressful. In this seminar, students will have plenty of time to practice and will be video-recorded in order to review their performance in more detail. After having successfully completed the course, the students should ■ be able to deliver a well-structured presentation ■ know how to use body language, gestures, voice, etc. to their advantage Teaching methods Recommended reading Additional information
Level of course Bachelor Recommended prerequisites None Type of course Seminar Weekly lecture hours (SWS) 2 ECTS credits 2 Workload In total 60h, 30h course attendance, 30h self-study Assessment (grading; pass/fail) graded Regular cycle Each semester Language of instruction English language presentations are integral to communication in the international workplace. While students and professionals are normally competent at giving oral presentations in their mother tongue, the dual challenges of preparing and delivering English presentations can seem quite daunting, time-consuming and stressful. In this seminar, students will have plenty of time to practice and will be video-recorded in order to review their performance in more detail. Learning outcome (competencies): After having successfully completed the course, the students should Recommended prerequisites Type of course Weekly lecture hours (SWS) ECTS credits 2 Workload Assessment (grading; pass/fail) Regular cycle Language of instruction Contents: Briglish language presentations are integral to communication in the international workplace. While students and professionals are normally competent at giving oral presentations in their mother tongue, the dual challenges of preparing and delivering English presentations can seem quite daunting, time-consuming and stressful. In this seminar, students will have plenty of time to practice and will be video-recorded in order to review their performance in more detail. After having successfully completed the course, the students should be able to deliver a well-structured presentation know how to use body language, gestures, voice, etc. to their advantage Exercises Simulation Video feedback □Others: Assessment methods Recommended reading Additional information
Type of course Seminar Weekly lecture hours (SWS) ECTS credits 2 Workload In total 60h, 30h course attendance, 30h self-study Assessment (grading; pass/fail) Regular cycle Language of instruction Contents: English language presentations are integral to communication in the international workplace. While students and professionals are normally competent at giving oral presentations in their mother tongue, the dual challenges of preparing and delivering English presentations can seem quite daunting, time-consuming and stressful. In this seminar, students will have plenty of time to practice and will be video-recorded in order to review their performance in more detail. Learning outcome (competencies): After having successfully completed the course, the students should • be able to deliver a well-structured presentation • know how to use body language, gestures, voice, etc. to their advantage Teaching methods Alecture □ Group work □ Exercises □ Simulation □ Video feedback □ Others: Assessment methods Recommended reading Marion Grussendorf: "English for Presentations", Cornelsen Adrian Wallwork: "English for Presentations at International Conferences", Springer
Type of course Weekly lecture hours (SWS) ECTS credits 2 Workload In total 60h, 30h course attendance, 30h self-study Assessment (grading; pass/fail) Regular cycle Language of instruction Contents: English English language presentations are integral to communication in the international workplace. While students and professionals are normally competent at giving oral presentations in their mother tongue, the dual challenges of preparing and delivering English presentations can seem quite daunting, time-consuming and stressful. In this seminar, students will have plenty of time to practice and will be video-recorded in order to review their performance in more detail. Learning outcome (competencies): After having successfully completed the course, the students should • be able to deliver a well-structured presentation • know how to use body language, gestures, voice, etc. to their advantage Teaching methods Assessment methods Recommended reading Additional information		None
Substantial Sub		Seminar
Second Contents 2	Weekly lecture hours
Assessment (grading; pass/fail) Grading Graded Grading Gradi		2
Pass/fail) Regular cycle Language of instruction Contents: English language presentations are integral to communication in the international workplace. While students and professionals are normally competent at giving oral presentations in their mother tongue, the dual challenges of preparing and delivering English presentations can seem quite daunting, time-consuming and stressful. In this seminar, students will have plenty of time to practice and will be video-recorded in order to review their performance in more detail. Learning outcome (competencies): After having successfully completed the course, the students should ■ be able to deliver a well-structured presentation ■ know how to use body language, gestures, voice, etc. to their advantage Teaching methods
Language of instruction English Contents: English language presentations are integral to communication in the international workplace. While students and professionals are normally competent at giving oral presentations in their mother tongue, the dual challenges of preparing and delivering English presentations can seem quite daunting, time-consuming and stressful. In this seminar, students will have plenty of time to practice and will be video-recorded in order to review their performance in more detail. Learning outcome (competencies): After having successfully completed the course, the students should • be able to deliver a well-structured presentation • know how to use body language, gestures, voice, etc. to their advantage Teaching methods	pass/fail)
English language presentations are integral to communication in the international workplace. While students and professionals are normally competent at giving oral presentations in their mother tongue, the dual challenges of preparing and delivering English presentations can seem quite daunting, time-consuming and stressful. In this seminar, students will have plenty of time to practice and will be video-recorded in order to review their performance in more detail. Learning outcome (competencies): After having successfully completed the course, the students should • be able to deliver a well-structured presentation • know how to use body language, gestures, voice, etc. to their advantage Teaching methods Zlecture □Group work Exercises ⊠Simulation □Video feedback □Others: Assessment methods Presentation, Exercises Recommended reading Marion Grussendorf: "English for Presentations", Cornelsen Adrian Wallwork: "English for Presentations at International Conferences", Springer in the international workplace. While students and professionals are normally competent at giving oral presentations in their mother tongue, the dual challenges of preparing and delivering English presentations can seem quite daunting, time-consuming and stressful. In this seminar, students will have plenty of time to practice and will be videorecorded in order to review their performance in more detail. Learning outcome (competencies): After having successfully completed the course, the students should • be able to deliver a well-structured presentation • know how to use body language, gestures, voice, etc. to their advantage Teaching methods Secure should • be able to deliver a well-structured presentation • know how to use body language, gestures, voice, etc. to their advantage Teaching methods		in the international workplace. While students and professionals are normally competent at giving oral presentations in their mother tongue, the dual challenges of preparing and delivering English presentations can seem quite daunting, time-consuming and stressful. In this seminar, students will have plenty of time to practice and will be video-recorded in order to review their performance in more detail.
ØExercises ØSimulation □Video feedback □Others: Assessment methods Presentation, Exercises Recommended reading Marion Grussendorf: "English for Presentations", Cornelsen Adrian Wallwork: "English for Presentations at International Conferences", Springer Additional information	_	 should be able to deliver a well-structured presentation know how to use body language, gestures, voice, etc.
Recommended reading Marion Grussendorf: "English for Presentations", Cornelsen Adrian Wallwork: "English for Presentations at International Conferences", Springer Additional information	Teaching methods
Recommended reading Marion Grussendorf: "English for Presentations", Cornelsen Adrian Wallwork: "English for Presentations at International Conferences", Springer Additional information	Assessment methods	Presentation, Exercises
		Marion Grussendorf: "English for Presentations", Cornelsen Adrian Wallwork: "English for Presentations at International
Recognition of credits	Additional information
	Recognition of credits	